International Perspectives and Strategies for Managing an Aging Workforce Ince, Fatma,2022-03-11 Older employees are often seen as an obstacle and not as an opportunity for companies especially regarding the transfer of knowledge and experience Effective development and utilization of older professional and managerial employees is an important issue as most organizations are not prepared to tailor their training methods to the needs and preferences of these employees due to negative stereotypes Managing a rapidly aging workforce and sustaining economic dynamism calls for systematic research to prevent age discrimination due to an incomplete knowledge of older workers and politically challenging policy choices that require strong political commitments robust management leadership and social consensus International Perspectives and Strategies for Managing an Aging Workforce examines the differences in stereotypes of older employees compared to younger employees in companies analyzes the impact of the aging workforce on retention productivity and well being and investigates organizational systems processes and practices for managing older workers Covering a range of topics such as retention and retirement this reference work is ideal for researchers academicians practitioners business owners managers human resource workers instructors and students Managing the Older Employee Casey Fitts Hawley,2009 The Aging Work Force ,1994 Managing the Aging Workforce Hanno Josef,2010-11-05 Inhaltsangabe Introduction In politics as well as in media and in social linguistic usage aging society is a meaningful term Since many years sociological scientists are warning against the impact of the demographic change This social problem confronts among others governments municipalities welfare services and especially the economy On current trends in the middle of the century 39 5% of the German population will be older than 60 UN population division 2008 People live a longer and healthier life and also birthrates significantly declined over the past 20 years Even migration in developed countries like Germany can only slow down the aging process Subsequently there will be a reduction of the supply of labor and a dramatic change in the age related composition of the workforce Businesses worldwide in developed countries are facing the challenge to manage the aging skilled workforce Executives find out that their companies will encounter a wave of retirements in the next decade as the baby boomers of the post World War II era reach retirement age Simultaneously the younger workforce has different expectations and work values than the older generation Beside these trends businesses face losing significant numbers of experienced employees by retirement and with them lots of skills and qualification potential disappear Thus a substantial loss of knowledge will take place if nothing will be done against it In order to maintain competitiveness a war of talents will affect businesses worldwide The battle for so called high potentials shows dramatically the consequence of the fact that a skilled workforce will be the scantiest resource for a successful business

1.1 Motivation and objectives Our aging society takes effect on all areas of life on political social and economical areas Hence the aging of the population affects the aging of employees in the companies In spite of this knowledge published many years ago the personnel policy of most companies still orientates towards younger people as a potential workforce Older employees often are discarded when they reach a certain age A study conducted by Bertelsmann Stiftung found out that in 2002 about 10% employees of an age between 55 and 64 were unemployed While innovation and competitiveness are related to the younger generation the older ones have to face prejudices against themselves Decisions of personnel managers affecting older employees come along

Millennials the latest generation to enter the global workforce are changing the face of employment This volume represents the most up to date research on the changes and issues from an international cast of generational researchers Shifting demographics around the world have created a unique historical phenomenon in which a large cohort of employees i e post war Baby Boomers are nearing retirement and a new cadre of younger workers are being recruited to replace them These twenty something year olds often referred to as Gen Y or Millennials represent the workforce of the future and come with their own set of expectations demands and work habits The contributors to this volume drawn from countries around the world document the cultural historical and social context surrounding this phenomenon The international perspective makes it possible to examine cross cultural similarities and differences in HRM practices This timely book provides an understanding of the new workforce in multiple countries and settings and a valuable reference as scholars and employers seek to understand the values beliefs and expectations of the next generation of workers While scholars and instructors will find this book indispensable the book will also have implications for domestic and multinational employers managers HR practitioners and career counselors

Managing an Ageing Workforce Daniel Smentek,2006-10-12

Inhaltsangabe Abstract Germany s population and consequently its workforce is ageing Fewer young people will enter the workforce and employers will be pressed to draw from an expanding pool of older people As a consequence the working age population is projected to decline significantly while the numbers of organisations depended on them will rise At the same time baby boomers are moving towards retirement and can not be replaced by middle aged or younger workers Facing impending talent shortages and a substantial loss of knowledge and experience companies might have little choice but to implement new employment strategies Primarily based on secondary research and supported by available data from various research institutions this paper considers relevant variables and approaches related to challenges from a German perspective This is done regardless of specific industry conditions and circumstances The paper covers selected peripheral issues like attitudes and retirement intentions of older workers and the myths and stereotypes about them It provides an overview of the German labour market specifically the situation of older people and how public policy has been responding to improve related conditions Finally minor and major interventions are presented to adapt human resource methods work arrangements and framework conditions Recognising that an effective response to the demographic changes requires a broader perspective i e considering all working generations the proposed initiatives primarily focus on the attraction and retention of older people International and more specific German demographic projections clearly indicate that age management is essential Organisations have to be prepared to cope with the impending labour and skill shortages resulting from a declining population and a likely mass exodus of the baby boom generation from the workplace Future competitiveness of businesses increasingly rests on the performance and productivity of older people Hence understanding retaining and utilising them becomes crucial Considering characteristics of the older workforce segment this paper shows that older workers are ready willing and able to stay employed Medical advancements and other quality of life factors lead to people live longer and healthier Myths and stereotypes about older workers are not upheld by available evidence and replaced by convictions to be a valuable resource for employers and capable
