The integration problem

As immigration into Australia increases, with an estimated 1 in 4 of people currently living in Australia being born overseas, concerns about integration have increased. Lately the pitiful efforts by Australian society to adapt to better include immigrants have been widely discussed in the media. Following discussions in parliament, the immigration minister stated "The time for finger pointing and political potshots is over – we all have a role to play in integration affairs". It might be time for a programme to help Australia better integrate and include immigrants into Australian society.
