The Lancashire cotton industry doubtless counts among the most thoroughly researched industries in Britain Cotton processing has attracted attention both as the pioneer of industrialization and the harbinger of industrial decline in many ways typifying the development of the British economy from unchallenged global leader to the demise of large sectors of its manufacturing industry Yet among the spate of book and articles published about the industry there is a conspicuous lacuna Gender though rarely addressed specifically permeates

the industry's historiography nonetheless This study tackles head on the notion of gender within the cotton industry during the period 1880-1914 not so much to trace its effects on the industry itself but instead concentrating on the ways gender radicalized particularly the female workers in the Lancashire mills In so doing it promotes the view that it was women weavers experience of the way in which gender inequality in the labour process clashed with varying degrees of inequality in the other spheres of their lives that caused many of them to organize for the franchise Their experience of equality in the labour process both sensitized them to inequality elsewhere and empowered them to fight against it by showing it to be a product of society rather than nature Drawing on the examples provided by disenfranchised working class men and middle class women alike they accounted for inequality in terms of their exclusion from the polity In the process of holding their own against male co-workers supervisory staff employers labour activists politicians and even many middle class women they evolved their own version of working class femininity which differed in important ways from the female domesticity that had a vibrant existence in labour rhetoric but rarely beyond

Elizabeth J. Clapp, Julie Roy Jeffrey, 2011-04-21 As historians have gradually come to recognize the involvement of women was central to the anti slavery cause in both Britain and the United States Like their male counterparts women abolitionists did not all speak with one voice Among the major differences between women were their religious affiliations an aspect of their commitment that has not been studied in detail Yet it is clear that the desire to live out and practice their religious beliefs inspired many of the women who participated in anti slavery activities in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries This book examines the part that the traditions practices and beliefs of English Protestant dissent and the American Puritan and evangelical traditions played in women s anti slavery activism Focusing particularly on Baptist Congregational Presbyterian and Unitarian women the essays in this volume move from accounts of individual women s participation in the movement as printers and writers to assessments of the negotiations and the occasional conflicts between different denominational groups and their anti slavery impulses Together the essays in this volume explore how the tradition of English Protestant Dissent shaped the American abolitionist movement and the various ways in which women belonging to the different denominations on both sides of the Atlantic drew on their religious beliefs to influence the direction of their anti slavery movements The collection provides a nuanced understanding of why these women felt compelled to fight for the end of slavery in their respective countries Women in Christianity in the Age of Empire Janet Wootton, 2022-03-07
