

Introduction to Religious Studies

Francis C.L. Rakotoane

Introduction

Religious Studies as an academic discipline is a systematic effort by scholars and researchers to investigate religion and religious phenomena applying other methods used in the study of such disciplines as humanities and social sciences than those exclusively used in Theology (Whaling, 1984; Hood et al 1996.). For this reason, it is a “multi-disciplinary, secular study of religious beliefs, behaviors, and institutions, emphasizing systematic, historically-based, and cross-cultural description, comparison, interpretation, and explanation” (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Religious_studies as retrieved on 7/3/2007).

The development of the discipline... has been necessitated by the naïve claim of religious communities to an exclusive possession of truth – a claim unhampered by any doubt as to the adequacy of its apprehension and understanding... When it prepares the ground for the raising of the problem of truth by gathering necessary data, this discipline is not only within its legitimate province but also is performing one of its essential functions (Wach, 1963:29)

Originating in late 19th century in Europe, this area of study is believed to have begun with Max Muller (Wach, 1963; Dhavamony, M. 1973; Smart, N. 1984). In 1856, this world renowned scholar published a book entitled, Comparative Mythology followed by two more works entitled, Introduction to Science of Religion, published in 1870 and lectures on Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religions of India, published in 1878. The said works marked the first stage of this discipline.

Wach explains this stage in the following words:

This first stage of study was characterized by a genuine enthusiasm, a sincere desire to understand other religions, and a measure of speculative interest. Among the various forms of expression of religious experience, it was mythology which attracted special attention (1963:3).

In its early years, the new discipline was known as Science of Religion (Religionswissenschaft in Germany and Sciences de la religion in the French-speaking world) or the Comparative Religion/Comparative Study of Religions (Eliade, M. 1959; Kant, E. 1960; Van der Leeuw, 1963). In some parts of the world such as USA, this came to be known as History of Religions and as Religiology in some of the Asian countries. It was called Science of Religion to denote the emancipation of the new discipline from Theology (Campsty, 1991; Eliade, 1987; Smart, 1973). On the other hand, it was called Comparative Religion because of the general tendency of scholars in this field of knowledge to compare religious data from different religions. “Everyone was looking for parallels” (Wach, 1963:3).
