variant of the rendition which was sung in Western Uttar Pradesh Delhi and Haryana with some overlap over the adjoining Brajbhasha cultural zone Throughout our historical past citizen soldiers were the backbone of all the armed forces of the sub continent working as farmers and herders during peacetime and as soldiers of the empire the king or military generals when called out during times of war It was folk renditions like Alha Udai that instilled in these citizens the requisite martial traits transforming them into tough and seasoned soldiers with a will to fight and bear all adversities which they encountered with bravery and fortitude This military rendition that prepared the residents of these lands to become soldiers from an early age was thus instrumental in evolving a strong martial culture in India the impact of which can be felt even today The rendition is therefore an integral part of Project Udbhav that seeks to study and document the long history of Indian military and strategic thought and traditions
