Neuronal Mechanisms of Hearing Lindsay Aitkin,2012-12-06 In contrast to the level of interest which is paid to the organization of meetings about the structure and function of the auditory periphery the central auditory system has received little attention in the last several years However much recent data accumulated during this period has provided auditory physiologists with new ideas about the function of the central auditory system The successful exploration of new anatomical tracing techniques tritiated aminoacids horseradish peroxidase 2 deoxyglucose together with the collection of electrophysiological data obtained with intracellular and extracellular recordings from the receptors and neurones in the auditory pathway have considerably deepened our understanding of central auditory function Particular interest was concentrated upon the development of the auditory system under normal conditions and in conditions of auditory deprivation Although from the methodological point of view the conditions of reversible auditory deprivation are complicated promising new data appeared in this field Similarly the specific ability of the auditory system to encode communication signals and speech sounds has been examined in many laboratories all over the world A very fruitful method based upon the results of electrical stimulation of cochlear nerve fibres in experimental animals is the application of neuroprostheses in deaf patients At the present time the method still does not meet all requirements and many improvements will be necessary Undoubtedly the exploration of the results of recent physiological experiments may help in the further improvement of neuroprostheses variety of mechanisms and principles of action by that receptor While some of the material in this book has appeared previously in journal articles most of it is presented here for the first time Basing this study on his twenty years of research at Princeton's Auditory Research Laboratories Professor Wever treats in anatomical and functional detail the auditory mechanism in about 250 species and subspecies of reptiles The anatomical treatment rests on dissections and histological examinations of the ears in serial section and portrays the relevant features in drawings that represent particular views of reconstructions The author evaluates the performance of these ears electrophysiologically in terms of the electrical potentials of the cochlea paying particular attention to problems of the transmission of vibrations inward to the cochlea and the actions there in stimulating the sensory cells Professor Wever finds that the cochlea emerged independently from the non auditory labyrinth in three different vertebrate groups fishes amphibians and reptiles It was among the reptiles however that the vertebrate ear took on a more advanced configuration from which it further evolved along separate lineages in the birds and mammals Ernest Glen Wever is Eugene Higgins Professor of Psychology Emeritus at Princeton University Originally published in 1978 The Princeton Legacy Library uses the latest print on demand technology to again make available previously out of print books from the distinguished backlist of Princeton University Press These editions preserve the original texts of these important books while presenting them in durable paperback and hardcover editions The goal of the Princeton Legacy Library is to vastly increase access to the rich scholarly heritage found in the thousands of books published by Princeton University Press since its founding in 1905
