Abstract Roads are among the major factors that highly influence the pattern of any urban growth, especially in overpopulated mega cities in developing countries. Egypt has become the second most populous country in Africa after Nigeria with a population exceeding 70 millions. Naturally, Cairo, the Capital city has grown rapidly becoming the largest urban center in Africa and the Middle East. The construction of Cairo ring road became a must to help in solving the ever increasing traffic jams and congestion. It is expected that Cairo ring road will give the capital city a free lift and serve foreign and local not only in greater Cairo but across the whole of Egypt, easing congestion for transport from Upper to Lower Egypt and vice versa eliminating the need to pass through the heart of Cairo.

However, it is important to study the impact of constructing the Cairo ring road to help in future developments and plans. It is claimed that the type of buildings associated with new ring roads in developing countries falls under the category of informal settlements.

A major reason behind building new roads is to relieve traffic congestions. Unfortunately, this is being challenged on the basis that new roads usually cause new travel and thus fail to relieve traffic congestions; this is called "induced demand".

1. INTRODUCTION

The main objective of this paper is to investigate the impact of constructing the ring road surrounding greater Cairo Metropolitan Area (GCMA). Other objective include the mapping of land cover change on areas surrounding the road relating this change to the economic and social levels of surrounding areas and analyzing any induced travel as a result of building the road.

With a low area of about just 277 square kilometers (area of which is built up) and a population of more than 16.5 million inhabitants as of 2000, GCMA, Egypt's capital, is deemed the largest metropolitan area in Africa and the Middle East. The tremendous and rapid change in its urban fabric and the associated informal development has resulted in the severe damage of GCMA's environment. Hence, the government immediately embarked on an ambitious plan for creating a new capital city to take care of the financial sector, more severe deterioration in the provided services and environment is expected. To try to minimize those impacts and to accommodate any future expansion, a master expansion plan should be put in place. A major element in the subject of any such plan is to fully understand the effect of any past projects, e.g. the construction of the ring road.

Three LANDSAT images acquired in 1980, before the construction of the road in 1981, immediately after the road is opened to traffic, and in 2000 were classified to produce three land cover maps for GCMA. This was followed by mapping the change induced over the considered time boundaries images.

The results were analyzed on four different levels adjacent to the ring road, those from 100 meters away from the road, close to the ring road (100 to 500 meters away from the road), medium range from the ring road (500 to 600 meters away from the road) and far from the ring road (from 600 meter to 1 kilometer away from the ring road).

Initial results indicate that there is an obvious change in land cover on the four levels of analysis, this is mostly in the exposure of vegetation areas and for the extent of built-up areas. This is clearer on the two analysis levels adjacent and very far.

2. METHODOLOGY

There are many methods that could be utilized in order to achieve the research objective; however, in this case, it was decided to use the Change Detection method due to the fact that it is one of the older and most common applications utilizing the data provided through the remote sensors of

Running the Obstacle Course to Sexual and Reproductive Health Bonnie Shepard, 2006-05-30 These four multi disciplinary studies focus on sexual and reproductive health advocacy and programs in Latin America Based on original research and the author's 25 years of experience working in the region the text illuminates the political cultural and organizational dynamics that pose an obstacle course to sexual and reproductive health dynamics that veterans of the culture wars in many other regions of the world will recognize One groundbreaking study of advocacy in Colombia and Chile for the legalization of abortion and divorce discusses the double discourse system that keeps repressive laws in place and punishes public opposition to political norms that are based on religious doctrine Another study of Latin American NGO regional and national advocacy networks examines the roots of difficulties they experience in unified decision making often resulting in failure to take decisive political action The book then offers two program case studies one in Peru and one in Chile focusing on issues of citizen participation and respect for rights in health systems and in schools The Peruvian study brings to life a four city experiment to foster community participation of women's organizations in health services The Chilean study focuses on a highly participatory and successful sex education program in public schools and The ways in which political controversies affected the program eventually contributing to its demise The book's holistic approach written from the point of view of an outsider participant makes a unique contribution to the study of social change in general and to worldwide efforts to mainstream human rights social justice and gender equality in sexual and reproductive health programs and policies

International Order and the Politics of Disaster Scott D. Watson, 2019-09-02 In this indispensable and comprehensive text Scott D Watson critically examines the current understanding of international order that underpins international disaster management and disaster diplomacy Based on empirical analysis of the three international disaster management regimes disaster relief disaster risk reduction and disaster migration and case studies of disaster diplomacy in the United States Egypt and China Watson argues that international disaster management and disaster diplomacy are not simply efforts to reduce the impact of disasters or to manage bilateral relations but to reinforce key beliefs about the larger international order Challenging the conventional understandings of disasters as natural as exogenous shocks or as unintended and accidental outcomes of the current order this text shows how the ideological foundations of the current heterogeneous international order produce recurrent disasters International Order and the Politics of Disaster is a vital source for undergraduate or graduate students interested in international responses to disasters and complex humanitarian emergencies forced migration and displacement as well as climate change and development
