9. Snakes belonging to the Colubridae, and some other primitive families, have small paracostal glands on the sides of the body.

have the remnants of pelvic girdles, as do members of several other families of primitive snakes, collectively known as Leptotyphlopidae. These include egg snakes, shell-eating snakes, gophers, and those in the Leptotyphlopidae, Boleophthalmus, and perhaps in some of the other more advanced families, small spot-like glands are associated with the pelvic girdles, and these may be used to stimulate females during courtship, apparently their only known function. In keeping with this, the spots of males are often proportionately larger than those of females.
