Two Essays in Finance Ward R. Kangas, 1997-10 Based on data on publicly traded insurance firms the first essay examines questions about the effect of large catastrophic events on insurance firms Rather than looking at a single event thirty catastrophic events were aggregated into quintiles and the cumulative abnormal returns around these events were found to be significantly positive over a 25 day trading window There is no significant evidence that post catastrophic stock returns are correlated to the magnitude of the catastrophe The second essay analyzes the effect of a large land grant university the University of Illinois on the State Treasury of Illinois If the State Treasury were acting as its own agent trying to maximize revenues would it choose higher education as an investment versus other alternative investments While it is true the State makes large expenditures for the operations of the University it is also true that individuals receiving degrees on average receive higher incomes Taxes or higher incomes offset the cost of operating the University The study is broken out by the level of student undergraduate masters doctorate medical professional and by function of the University It was found that all levels of education have a positive return not only for the individual but also for the State Treasury This is in excess of any non pecuniary benefits to the State of having a better educated population or the local taxation effects on the county or city where the campus is located These returns are found to be higher than other types of investments Insuring Your Business Insurance Information Institute,2008 Global Pirates Robert Tillman,2002 A critical investigation of international insurance fraud Fundamentals of Risk and Insurance Emmett J.
