Peter H May, Paula Bernasconi, Sven Wunder, Ruben Lubowski, 2015-07-22 The Brazilian Forest Code FC requires all private rural properties to maintain a fixed proportion of their area in natural vegetation as a legal reserve whose proportions are differentiated by biome Landowners have often ignored the law Regaining full compliance would require costly restoration in areas converted Recent changes to the FC provide that landowners may compensate their legal reserve shortages by purchasing surplus compliance obligations from other properties This paper discusses critical policy issues regarding Environmental Reserve Quotas or Cotas de Reserva Ambiental CRA We examine the relative environmental effectiveness of the CRA its efficiency in resource use and social justice as well as potential implementation hurdles Allowing for compensation with off site conservation can enable both more efficient and less fragmented agricultural production as well as forest conservation compared to the default on farm conservation proposition CRA as a means for compensation has great intuitive appeal yet controversy exists regarding its implementation We review international experience with similar economic instruments as well as Brazilian studies simulating the potential results of the CRA Interviews with leading actors regarding the instrument complement the literature review We finish with a synthetic assessment of the implications of our results for policy implementation

Forests and People Thomas Sikor, Johannes Stahl, 2012-05-23 A human rights based agenda has received significant attention in writings on general development policy but less so in forestry Forests and People presents a comprehensive analysis of the rights based agenda in forestry connecting it with existing work on tenure reform governance rights and cultural rights As the editors note in their introduction the attention to rights in forestry differs from rights based approaches in international development and other natural resource fields in three critical ways First redistribution is a central demand of activists in forestry but not in other fields Many forest rights activists call for not only the redirection of forest benefits but also the redistribution of forest tenure to redress historical inequalities Second the rights agenda in forestry emerges from numerous grassroots initiatives setting forest related human rights apart from approaches that derive legitimacy from transnational human rights norms and are driven by international and national organizations Third forest rights activists attend to individual as well as peoples collective rights whereas approaches in other fields tend to emphasize one or the other set of rights Forests and People is a timely response to the challenges that remain for advocates as new trends and initiatives such as market based governance REDD and a rush to biofuels can sometimes seem at odds with the gains from what has been a two decade expansion of forest peoples rights It explores the implications of these forces and generates new insights on forest governance for scholars and provides strategic guidance for activists
