Evolutionary Aspects of Nutrition and Health Artemis P. Simopoulos, 1999-01-01 The issues treated in this publication are brought together in this way for the first time For many of the chronic diseases familial predispositions are well established and there is good evidence for true genetic predisposition When Homo erectus emerged 1.7 million years ago humans existed as non cereal eating hunter gatherers It is on this basis that according to the hypothesis of the carnivore connection an insulin resistant genotype evolved to provide survival and reproductive advantages to populations adapted to a high meat low plant food low carbohydrate nutritional environment Cereal became the major source of calories and protein in the human diet only about 10 000 years ago Humankind has thus had little evolutionary experience to adapt to this new food type maladaptation being the consequence Moreover studies comparing energy expenditure in Western societies and during the

Paleolithic period indicate a low level of physical activity not previously encountered in human history a state to which humans are not genetically adapted Together with the dietary changes this has led to a modern environment in which a number of individuals are prone to chronic diseases causing increases in non insulin dependent diabetes mellitus hypertension coronary artery disease cancer and obesity As a consequence the lifestyle approach for the prevention and management of these diseases is essential varying with national dietary patterns and national economy This publication will be of special interest to physicians geneticists nutritionists dieticians anthropologists food technologists food policy makers and individuals interested in personal and family health

Understanding Insulin-dependent Diabetes H. Peter Chase, 2000 Describes in detail the topics covered in the three day diabetes treatment plan conducted at the University of Colorado Health Sciences Center

Evolution of the Human Diet Peter S. Ungar, 2007 We are interested in the evolution of hominin diets for several reasons One is the fundamental concern over our present day eating habits and the consequences of our societal choices such as obesity prevalent in some cultures and starvation in others Another is that humans have learned to feed themselves in extremely varied environments and these adaptations which are fundamentally different from those of our closest biological relatives have to have had historical roots of varying depth The third and the reason why most paleoanthropologists are interested in this question is that a species trophic level and feeding adaptations can have a strong effect on body size locomotion life history strategies geographic range habitat choice and social behavior Diet is key to understanding the ecology and evolution of our distant ancestors and their kin the early hominins A study of the range of foods eaten by our progenitors underscores just how unhealthy many of our diets are today This volume brings together authorities from disparate fields to offer new insights into the diets of our ancestors Paleontologists archaeologists primatologists nutritionists and other researchers all contribute pieces to the puzzle This volume has at its core four main sections Reconstructed diets based on hominin fossils tooth size shape structure wear and chemistry mandibular biomechanics Archaeological evidence of subsistence stone tools and modified bones Models of early hominin diets based on the diets of living primates both human and non human paleoecology and energetics Nutritional analyses and their implications for evolutionary medicine New techniques for gleaned information from fossil teeth bones and stone tools new theories stemming from studies of paleoecology and new models coming from analogy with modern humans and other primates all contribute to our understanding When these approaches are brought together they offer an impressive glimpse into the lives of our distant ancestors The contributions in this volume explore the frontiers of our knowledge in each of these disciplines as they address the knowns the unknowns and the unknowables of the evolution of hominin diets
