

Identifying

For children who find talking and communicating difficult, you may like to use this technique as a first step in helping and supporting them. The purpose is to help the child and help them to understand what they are doing. For example, if a child is talking and you are not sure what they are saying, you can say 'I can hear you saying...' and then repeat what they have said. This can help them to understand what they are saying and help them to hear themselves.

Modeling

By using words and actions with them, you can help them to understand how to use words and actions. When providing information, children are encouraged to listen, copy, hear, see and then use words and actions to show what they are doing. It is also a good idea to encourage them to use words and actions to show what they are doing. This can help them to understand what they are doing and help them to hear themselves.

When playing together:

- use words and actions to show what they are doing
- use words and actions to show what they are doing
- use words and actions to show what they are doing
- use words and actions to show what they are doing

Use the words and actions to show what they are doing. This can help them to understand what they are doing and help them to hear themselves.

Repeating

This is a good strategy to use in play and in conversation with a child who is having difficulty understanding. The purpose is to help the child and help them to understand what they are doing. For example, if a child is talking and you are not sure what they are saying, you can say 'I can hear you saying...' and then repeat what they have said. This can help them to understand what they are saying and help them to hear themselves.

Use the words and actions to show what they are doing. This can help them to understand what they are doing and help them to hear themselves.

For example, when a child is playing with a toy, you can say 'I can hear you saying...' and then repeat what they have said. This can help them to understand what they are saying and help them to hear themselves.

Use the words and actions to show what they are doing.

Use the words and actions to show what they are doing. This can help them to understand what they are doing and help them to hear themselves.

It is important to remember to repeat and model what the child says without directly correcting. This can help them to understand what they are saying and help them to hear themselves.

Encouraging the Child

Use the words and actions to show what they are doing. This can help them to understand what they are doing and help them to hear themselves.

Strategies to Support Communication and Language Development

Communication and language skills are central to children's development. When working with young children, there are several strategies adults can use to support their language development and communication skills.

Try using these techniques to further support children when interacting, playing and exploring to develop language acquisition and understanding.

Commenting Rather Than Questioning

Our world is full of questions but for young children, asking too many questions can sometimes be met with silence, sensory overload, removing themselves from the play and an unnecessary pressure to respond. By using the commenting technique, you can reduce the pressure for them to speak by providing a model which they can copy. For example, instead of 'What are you doing?' try 'Wow! You have built a tower!' or 'You are building... building a tower!'

When using this technique:

- reduce the amount of language used
- talk about what the child is doing
- allow time for them to respond
- don't worry if you are repetitive because often children will repeat and copy the key words and phrases

Pause and Wait

When interacting with children in a playful context, by pausing after asking a question, often children may like to count in your head up to ten. Some children need extra giving them more time to reply. They will feel less pressure and use language and give a greater depth of answer.

Language, Literacy, and Learning in Educational Practice Barry Stierer, Janet Maybin, 1994 Language and literacy are highly contested areas of the curriculum Questions of what should be taught how it should be taught and who should control such decisions are increasingly subjected to public scrutiny debate and challenge in a manner which is often more reflection of competing social and political values than of theory and research evidence In recent years there has been a rapid development of new conceptual frameworks for understanding language literacy and learning from such diverse fields as anthropology cultural studies social psychology and critical linguistics The papers in this collection have been chosen because they will help readers to consider ways in which these new developments in theory and research may be applied to everyday practice
