

Chapter Three New States and Reorientations, 1368–1764

TRANSFORMATIONS IN COMMERCE AND RELIGION

The first emperor of China's Ming dynasty (1368–1644) declared a new policy in 1368: Maritime trade would henceforth be a government monopoly.

Only countries recognized as tribute-paying vassals would be permitted to trade with China, and private trade would no longer be allowed. This new definition of the tribute trade refocused Southeast Asian polities both economically and politically. The Chinese emperor welcomed tribute missions bringing goods, information, and affirmations of loyalty; Southeast Asian portpolities with the organizational and financial resources took advantage of the opportunity. These included at least twenty-two places in the Philippines: For example, "Luzon" sent missions in 1372, 1405, and 1410, and the rising southern port of Sulu sent six missions between 1370 and 1424. Some rulers traveled to China to pay fealty in person, and when one Sulu ruler died at the Chinese court, he was given a respectful funeral attended by the emperor. Official

Chinese ships paid return visits to recognize their vassals—Admiral Zheng

He's seven expeditions from 1405 to 1443 included one or two visits to Sulu.

The number of Ming ceramics found in Philippine archaeological sites and shipwrecks confirm the high level of trade in the Ming period.

These parameters for the tribute trade lasted only about a century before

Chinese emperors abandoned state trading. But it was long enough to stimulate the development of powerful port-states throughout the region. On the mainland, Ayutthaya (in Thailand), Champa (southern Vietnam), and Cambodia and, in island Southeast Asia, Brunei, Java, and Melaka all benefited from Chinese engagement. Melaka was established about 1400 by a prince in exile from Srivijaya. On the west coast of the Malay Peninsula facing the strait that came to bear its name, Melaka (Malacca) was in a position to control maritime trade between India and China. The Ming trade edict offered the first rulers of this new port-state a timely opportunity, and they made several landlockedness, infrastructure and trade: new estimates for central asian countries Christopher Grigoriou, Abstract This paper assesses the impact of internal infrastructure and landlockedness on Central Asian trade using a panel gravity equation estimated on a large sample of countries 167 countries over 1992 2004 The panel structure of the dataset makes it possible to control for country pair specific effects as opposed to the usual importer and exporter effects that would otherwise be captured by the coefficients of time invariant variables such as distance or landlockness Our findings highlight the need to pursue a dual policy agenda First transit corridors are regional public goods and should be managed as such through international cooperation International Financial Institutions can and do play a key role in this regard through assistance coordination and policy dialogue Second the Central Asian countries should actively seek diversification of their transit corridors to prevent the creation or maintenance of monopoly positions in transit and bottleneck points such as trans shipment platforms
