Repatriation As A Part Of Reconstructive Process In Torture Survivors Interpersonal And Intrapersonal Process:

Repatriation as a Part of Reconstructive Process in Torture Survivors International Rehabilitation Council for Torture Victims, Sweden. Styrelsen för internationellt utvecklingssamarbete, 2003 Handbook of Resilience in Children of War Chandi Fernando, Michel Ferrari, 2013-04-23 Their frightened angry faces are grim reminders of the reach of war They are millions of children orphaned displaced forced to flee or to fight And just as they have myriad possibilities for trauma their lives also hold great potential for recovery The Handbook of Resilience in Children of War explores these critical phenomena at the theoretical research and treatment levels beginning with the psychosocial effects of exposure to war Narratives of young people's lives in war zones as diverse as Afghanistan Sri Lanka Columbia and Sudan reveal the complexities of their experiences and the meanings they attach to them providing valuable keys to their rehabilitation Other chapters identify strengths and limitations of current interventions and of constructs of resilience as applied to youth affected by war Throughout this cutting edge volume the emphasis is on improving the field through more relevant research and accurate evidence based interventions in such areas as An ecological resilience approach to promoting mental health in children of war Child soldiers and the myth of the ticking time bomb The Child Friendly Spaces postwar intervention program The role of education for war zone immigrant and refugee students Political violence identity and adjustment in children The Handbook of Resilience in Children of War is essential reading for researchers scientist practitioners and graduate students in diverse fields including clinical child school and developmental psychology child and adolescent psychiatry social work counseling education and allied medical and public health disciplines Hrvatska bibliografija ,2003

"Getting Better" After Torture from the Perspective of the Survivor Brian Louis Isakson, 2008 The traditional model of Western mental health treatment for survivors of torture has focused mainly on posttraumatic stress disorder and related conditions This model is symptoms focused in which the goal is to reduce pathology In this model the mental health professional is the expert and the survivors learn from the professionals Using grounded theory methodology the current study seeks to expand the understanding for treatment of torture survivors by investigating from the perspective of the torture survivors the process of getting better after torture By asking the survivors to explain this process this study broadens the focus of areas of healing and intervention to include social psychological political and biological aspects of their lives that need to be impacted in order for them to get better Eleven adult torture survivors 9 men and 2 women from various African and Asian countries described their process of getting better through qualitative interviews A model of getting better was developed to describe this process The central phenomenon of this process is moving on from difficult past experiences Participants described a multi dimensional process that includes various environmental factors and intrapersonal beliefs and coping strategies that promoted moving on and getting better These multi dimensional themes include using belief and value systems establishing safety and stability and establishing social support in order to move on Once the survivors felt a sense of safety and support they felt empowered to take action to move on from their past These action strategies include disclosing torture experiences controlling memories supporting others and utilizing available supports Moving on led to improved relationships more adaptive functioning improved health and release from emotional pain Findings of this study were consistent with current literature documenting recovery after torture and other traumatic experiences Implications for both theory and practice are discussed and directions for future research are delineated
