It is somewhere remarked by an intelligent writer that he thinks the present condition in which man is placed in this world, where perpetual toil and attention are necessary to the search and discovery of truth, is preferable to one in which all truth should be disclosed to his understanding by intuitive perception. One of the purest and most exalted enjoyments of which the human mind is susceptible is that which it experiences in the pursuit and acquisition of knowledge, and there can be no doubt that according to the usual wisdom discoverable in the works of the Creator, who annexes a pleasure to every virtuous exertion of the human powers, there is a high degree of satisfaction derived from every effort of the understanding in quest of science. Truth is to the mind of man what light is to the eye, while ignorance and error are like darkness to that sense.
