Reading, Language, and Literacy Fran Lehr,Jean Osborn,2012-10-12 The impetus for this book emerged from a conference that brought together publishers and reading researchers and educators for the purpose of examining the best available research evidence about what we know and what we have yet to learn about the teaching of reading and about how children learn to read The goal of the conference was to contribute to a sound research base upon which to develop classroom practices that will ensure that every American child will become fully literate Because the field is still so deeply divided over the best ways to translate belief into classroom practice the editors decided to highlight rather than gloss over these divisions It is hoped that the papers in this volume will promote thought and discussion that will lead to action in improving reading instruction for children now and into the new century No Five Fingers are Alike Joseph C.

Berland,1982 Snake charmers bards acrobats magicians trainers of performing animals and other nomadic artisans and entertainers have been a colorful and enduring element in societies throughout the world Their flexible social system based on highly specialized individual skills and spatial mobility contrasts sharply with the more rigid social system of sedentary peasants and traditional urban dwellers Joseph Berland brings into focus the ethnographic and psychological differences between nomadic and sedentary groups by examining how the experiences of South Asian gypsies and their urban counterparts contribute to basic perceptual habits and skills No Five Fingers Are Alike based on three years of participant research among rural Pakistani groups provides the first detailed description in print of Asian gypsies By applying methods of anthropological observation as well as psychological experimentation Berland develops a theory about the relationship between social experience and mental growth He suggests that there are certain social conditions under which mental growth can be accelerated His work promises to stand as an important contribution to the cross cultural literature on cognitive development University of California Union Catalog of Monographs Cataloged by the Nine Campuses from 1963 Through 1967: Authors & titles
