providing information for users of multi agency services for disabled children is an invaluable resource for professionals parents and carers

Unlocking Key Working Suzanne Mukherjee, Bryony Beresford, Patricia Sloper, 1999 Parents researchers practitioners and policy makers alike have consistently identified the need for parents with a disabled child to have a single named person whom they can approach about any problem who offers assistance in accessing and coordinating services Such a person is often referred to as a key worker But how can this be accomplished This report is based on a project in which multi agency key worker services were planned developed and implemented in two local areas Managers and practitioners in these areas worked in partnership with the research team to observe monitor and evaluate this process Unlocking key working provides a unique insight into how and how not to go about establishing multi agency key worker services It will be a valuable resource for professionals wishing to develop the provision of such services in their area offering practical guidance on what needs to be addressed when planning and developing the service This report is a companion volume to Real change not rhetoric The Policy Press 1999 which describes the innovative approach taken in this project to getting research findings implemented in practice

Real Change Not Rhetoric Patricia Sloper, 1999 It is well established particularly in the social care field that research often fails to influence practice This report however describes a new approach to getting research findings into practice The project discussed involved researchers working in collaboration with services to develop multi agency key worker services for families with disabled children This required change at both organisational and individual practice levels within an inter agency approach The project therefore addressed a number of thorny issues surrounding the implementation of change Real change not rhetoric describes the methods used and what worked in promoting change The authors worked with key personnel to support them in developing and implementing a key worker service and were able to identify the barriers and opportunities faced in promoting the changes involved The report provides valuable information and practical guidelines both for researchers wishing to take a more proactive approach in getting their findings into practice and for managers in service agencies trying to promote change in line with evidence based practice This report is a companion to Unlocking key working The Policy Press 1999 which focuses on the evaluation of the key worker services themselves

Is Anyone Listening? Rosemary Aris, Gill Hague, Audrey Mullender, 2004-03-01

Domestic violence is in the public eye as never before but how often are abused women consulted or involved in the new services and policies? This book investigates and reveals that the voices of survivors of domestic violence are often simply not heard: silenced the women themselves become invisible. Is Anyone Listening? draws on the experiences of other service user movements to provide a strong conceptual framework for thinking about abused women's participation in policy and service development. It discusses empowerment issues and the women's movement against gender violence, exploring how far refuge organisations and other women's movement services have influenced statutory services and vice versa. It includes many practical ideas for involving women in the improvement of both policy and practice and gives examples of inspiring and innovative projects. Based on a study carried out as part of the Economic and Social Research Council's Violence Research Programme, Is Anyone Listening? offers a unique analysis of the sensitive and complex issues involved in developing service user participation within the domestic violence field. The insights it provides will enable policy makers, activists, students, practitioners and women who have experienced domestic violence to move forward together.

Permanent Exclusion from School and Institutional Prejudice Anna Carlile, 2013-02-11

Permanent exclusion from school and institutional prejudice. Creating change through critical bureaucracy. Anna Carlile. This book tells the story of permanent exclusion from school from within an urban children's services department. It focuses on two areas: what contributes to instances of permanent exclusion from school and what the effects are of its existence as a disciplinary option. The book questions how and why local government officers make particular decisions about children and young people. Rather than focussing on what children and young people did behaviourally to get excluded, the book adopts a Foucauldian analysis to concentrate on their place within a larger policy community which includes professionals and policy makers. It adopts a critical bureaucratic exercise in studying up on powerful organisations, an informed approach to ameliorating social inequity. The findings described here suggest a broad, deep and opaque seam of institutional prejudice: permanent exclusion from school can be understood to be both caused by this and to intensify its effects. This has implications for the voices of young people subject to or at risk of permanent exclusion from school, and the final chapter outlines a Foucauldian/Freirian student voice project offering ideas about how schools might tackle this.

Integrated Offender Management and the Policing of Prolific Offenders Frederick Cram, 2023-05-30. This book analyses the impact of Integrated Offender Management (IOM) on contemporary policing and separates the rhetoric from the reality. Drawing on a qualitative study within an English police force over two years, this book examines the experiences of prolific offenders subject to IOM and sheds light on the culture and practice of the police and staff from other criminal justice agencies working within the scheme. While IOM has been judged to have had initial successes in reducing the criminal activities of prolific offenders, this book tests the validity of such claims and considers the apparent disjuncture between policy statements made about the workings of IOM and how IOM policing operations are realized on the ground. It makes a unique contribution to research on police culture and practice and multi-agency working in the criminal justice system. An accessible and compelling read, this book will appeal to policymakers as well as students and scholars of criminology, sociology, policing and politics.
