Mersey Shipping The Twilight Years:

Mersey Shipping Ian Collard, 2000 This is a book about life in a great maritime port of the 1960s The photographs from the period show a busy vibrant scene of commercial and industrial activity However this was a point when shipping was about to change drastically as the emphasis switched to the shipping of goods and general cargoes in containers The large shipping lines restructured into new container consortiums and the big fleets of conventional ships vanished almost overnight Along with them went the tugs barges and ancillary industries that provided employment to thousands in the region Today many of Liverpool's docks and warehouses lie empty as most goods are shipped through the Royal Seaforth Container Terminal The twilight years of the 1960s were the last heyday of Liverpool's long maritime history and are captured in Ian Collard's striking period pictures From the glories of Cunard to the everyday going and coming of coastal ferries the busy scenes of a port at work are brought to life Sadly it is a scene that has gone forever but as Liverpool's dock buildings take on new roles and the city moves into the twenty first century we can at least look and remember the sea going commerce that made Liverpool great Ships Monthly, 2002 Marine News, 2001 Sea Breezes, 2008
