Oregon Boy In The Yukon An Alaska Highway Story:

An Oregon Boy in the Yukon Willis R. Grafe, 1992 The Black Soldiers Who Built the Alaska Highway John Virtue, 2012-12-11 This is the first detailed account of the 5 000 black troops who were reluctantly sent north by the United States Army during World War II to help build the Alaska Highway and install the companion Canol pipeline. They were the first black regiments deployed outside the lower 48 states during the war. The enlisted men, most of them from the South, faced racial discrimination from white officers, were barred from entering any towns for fear they would procreate a mongrel race with local women and endured winter conditions they had never experienced before. Despite this, they won praise for their dedication and their work. Congress in 2005 said that the wartime service of the four regiments covered here contributed to the eventual desegregation of the Armed Forces.

We Fought the Road Christine McClure, Dennis McClure, 2017-10-15 We Fought the Road is the story of the building of the Alaska Canada Highway during World War II. More than one third of the 10 607 builders were black, thought to be incapable of performing on a war front by many of their white commanding officers. Their task, which required punching through wilderness on a route blocked by the Rocky Mountains and deadly permafrost during the worst winter on record, has been likened to the building of the Panama Canal. Unlike most accounts that focus on the road's military planners, We Fought the Road is boots on the ground and often personal, based in part on letters from the Three Cent Romance, the successful courtship via mail discovered in the author's family papers.
