The Macroeconomic Dimensions Of Arms Reduction F Gerard Adams,1992-11-17 An evaluation of how reduced defence expenditures may affect economic performance in the United States and other industrial market economies in the developing world and in the countries of the former Soviet bloc Priority, Duality, and Penetration in the Soviet Command Economy Richard Eric Ericson,Rand Corporation,1988 This Note analyzes characteristics of the Soviet economy that are underemphasized in existing macroeconomic models of the Soviet Union The structure of the new models developed reflects in simplified form the planned dual nature of the Soviet economy in terms of priority and nonpriority sectors allocational and technological rigidities and the effect of priority in determining the response to shocks during plan implementation Some empirically verifiable implications that do not emerge in standard macroeconomic models stem from this analysis 1 the variance of output plan fulfillment is greater in nonpriority than in priority sectors 2 there is more excess capacity in priority sectors 3 priority factor input use proportions are unrelated to economy wide tradeoffs 4 inputs into priority sectors are protected from fluctuations in economic activity and 5 factor productivity is lower in priority sectors perhaps because of flexibility considerations Rand abstracts

The Changing Soviet Priority Economy Gregory G. Hildebrandt,Peter B. Staugaard,1991 Post-Soviet Affairs ,1995 The Hopkins-Kennedy Optimal Control Model of the Soviet Economy Mark Myron Hopkins,Rand Corporation,1985 This paper discusses the Hopkins Kennedy optimal control model of the Soviet economy placing special emphasis on scenarios concerning weather foreign trade energy alternative views of the basic nature of the Soviet economy and technology The model presents results as tradeoff curves between consumption and defense for projections initiated in 1980 and run to 1990 The model has 21 production sectors and three factors labor and two types of capital The author finds that optimal control is an excellent tool for analyzing the Soviet economy and that the largest impact on the results is caused by which of the alternative views that of Rosefielde and Lee Igor Birman or the CIA of the Soviet economy is assumed to be correct Finally for a given view of the Soviet economy issues concerning the rate of total factor productivity growth are the most important and research emphasis in this area should be increased Rand Abstracts

Soviet Defense Spending Alvin H. Bernstein,Rand Corporation,1989 This Note attempts to provide the means for evaluating the frequently made comparison between the Soviet Union and ancient Sparta as states where politics takes precedence over economics It marshals and explicates both the ancient evidence and modern scholarship on the issues that a student of the contemporary Soviet economy must understand in order to judge to what extent ancient Spartan society sheds light on the way the Soviet Union does business today The author describes the origins developments and ultimate failure of Sparta s political economy and analyzes that economy s strengths and vulnerabilities He points out that the striking similarities that many scholars have noted between the two societies come principally from the fact that they are both militaristic states He also cautions that the Spartan analogy may be useful for acquiring insights into the Soviet economy but it has no predictive value The American Bibliography of Slavic and East European Studies ,1987 A
