In his later months he appears more and more to have taken into his own hands the reins of government which Northumberland, now prey to a paralyzing insecurity, had allowed to slip from his grasp.

Marvin Arthur Breslow. A Mirror of England: English Puritan Views of Foreign Nations, 1618-1640 (Harvard Historical Studies, vol. LXXXIV). Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1970. xii + 178 pp. $5.50.

This book is designed to 'describe and analyze the Puritan contribution to English nationalism as it helped to shape the context of discontents in the decades before the English Revolution.' Investigating Puritan attitudes toward the Palatinate, Spain, the Dutch Netherlands, France, and Sweden, Mr. Breslow seeks to demonstrate how such views expressed certain aspects of their thinking about their own nation. Because of the internal condition of England after 1640 and the altered, less religious character of the European conflict by that time, the final war-time years are not considered.

No attempt is made to define, in concrete fashion, the term 'Puritan.' The reader is told that 'insofar as a pattern of thought can be found in the Puritan views of other nations, that pattern might be expected to provide some kind of definition of "Puritan".' This is manifestly a loose characterization, and, in this reviewer's opinion, weakens the argument, particularly since certain opinions figuring prominently in this study—hostility toward Spain, for example—were widely held. Mr. Breslow is aware of this, but holds that the views of the 'Protestant public' were less clearly defined and lacked, in their expression, the intensity of the 'Puritan' propagandists. Thus Chamberlain's letters reveal an 'intelligent concern,' whereas D'Ewes's diary testifies to his 'personal agonizings,' over foreign affairs. In ascertaining opinion, there is little use of unpublished manuscripts apart from the State Papers Domestic and several parliamentary diaries, but well over a hundred contemporary printed works, large and small, are listed in the bibliography. Of these about a fifth are from the pen of Thomas Scott, 'the most energetic Puritan propagandist.' The importance of the writings of Sibbes, Gouge, and Preston (all Puritan ministers) is also acknowledged.

The Sacred Mirror Robert Elder, 2016-03-02 Most histories of the American South describe the conflict between evangelical religion and honor culture as one of the defining features of southern life before the Civil War The story is usually told as a battle of clashing worldviews but in this book Robert Elder challenges this interpretation by illuminating just how deeply evangelicalism in Methodist Baptist and Presbyterian churches was interwoven with traditional southern culture arguing that evangelicals owed much of their success to their ability to appeal to people steeped in southern honor culture Previous accounts of the rise of evangelicalism in the South have told this tale as a tragedy in which evangelicals eventually adopted many of the central tenets of southern society in order to win souls and garner influence But through an examination of evangelical language and practices Elder shows that evangelicals always shared honor s most basic assumptions Making use of original sources such as diaries correspondence periodicals and church records Elder recasts the relationship between evangelicalism and secular honor in the South proving the two concepts are connected in much deeper ways than have ever been previously understood Religious & Theological Resources ,1970
