Report 6 (2)* International labour conference, 65, 1979, geneve,1979 Gaining The Dividends Of Longer Life Jarold A. Kieffer,2019-04-08 Not all older people are unfit for work Indeed most people over age 55 remain physically and mentally able to work and rather than suffer the pressures of inflation or the boredom of idleness many would prefer to stay productive longer Dr Kieffer says that their extensive experience and education qualify most of them to remain self reliant well past current retirement ages If they are enabled to do so it would delay and reduce the time when they are forced to be financially and in some cases physically dependent He argues that unless policy leaders in both the public and private sectors act quickly and imaginatively to gain the financial and social dividends that can accrue from longer life our country by default will find itself preoccupied over the next thirty years with unnecessarily high costs of supporting its longer living and rapidly increasing older population Dr Kieffer explains why current retirement policies are no longer economically and politically manageable and he suggests a cost effective strategy whereby public and private funds could be used to enable millions of older people to remain active in jobs that serve unmet community needs He also outlines a strategy for helping young workers build retirement income assets during their entire work lives so that the unintended burdens that have fallen on the Social Security pension and public assistance programs can be eased and made more manageable in the future Lastly he describes the roles that government agencies businesses educational institutions foundations and older people themselves can play in carrying out the jobs and retirement income strategies The Future of Older Workers in America Jerome M.

Rosow, Robert Zager, Work in America Institute, 1980 Aging and Work in the 21st Century Kenneth S. Shultz, Gary A. Adams, 2007-02-23 The aging of baby boomers along with the predicted decrease of the available labor pool will place increased scrutiny and emphasis on issues relating to an aging workforce Furthermore future economic downturns will place strong pressure on older workers to remain in the workforce and on retirees to seek employment again Aging and Work in the Older Workers in the Market for Part-time Employment James Jondrow, Frank P. R. Brechling, Alan Marcus, 1983 This paper examines the sources and policy implications of the sparsity of part time work among older workers One starting point is the contradiction between expectation that the transition out of the labor force will be gradual by means of part time work and what appears to be the reality that retirement is sudden Another starting point is the perception of older workers that part time work at their current wage is scarce We begin by reviewing evidence from a number of data sets indicating that despite statements by older workers that they have a strong interest in part time work in most cases retirement is sudden The country's limited number of partial retirees are concentrated in a few industries agriculture service finance insurance real estate Partial retirement is rare in manufacturing public utilities and government Workers approaching retirement age are not spread evenly across industries Construction transportation and finance insurance real estate have a high than average proportion The industries that retain the highest proportion of older workers are trade and government The industries that accept older workers most readily from other industries are agriculture and trade Older Workers International Labour Office, 1979 Reconsidering Retirement Courtney C. Coile, Phillip B. Levine, 2010-11-01 The economic downturn that began in 2008 the most severe in decades has hit older Americans hard Many have seen huge losses to their 401 k's In numerous cases the value of homes the largest investment most older Americans have ever made has diminished considerably In addition large numbers of American workers including those 50 and older have lost their jobs and may have difficulty replacing them Suddenly the future seems a whole lot less certain throwing years of planning into doubt In Reconsidering Retirement economists Courtney Coile and Phillip Levine go beyond the headlines to explain how the economic crisis will affect the future plans and well being of older Americans Amid well publicized reports that older workers needed to stay on the job because of the crisis the number of U S workers claiming Social Security retirement benefits actually rose substantially from 2008 to 2009 The authors maintain that job loss has been the culprit leading to premature retirement and while this trend may have been less noticed it is perhaps the more significant outcome of the crisis Coile and Levine examine the three major characteristics of the recession thought to influence retirement behavior decline in the stock market reduced housing values and a weak labor market The authors find that lower home prices did not actually affect retirement behavior but that the decline in the stock market did lead some workers to delay retirement while a weakened labor market actually forced more older workers with fewer skills into retirement As a result these early retirees who rely on Social Security face a lifetime of lower benefits The legacy of recessions is that those most in need usually are last to reap the benefits of an economic recovery While the lion s share of media coverage after the economic downturn of 2008 09 has gone to the plight of older workers who remain employed Courtney Coile and Phillip Levine exami Advances in Research on Age in the Workplace and Retirement Cort W. Rudolph,Hannes Zacher,Susanne Scheibe,2018-01-16 Shifts in the age composition of the workforce coupled with dynamic definitions of retirement represent important issues that influence work processes and more generally the experience of working across one s career For example redefinitions of careers and the changing nature of working have contributed to the emergence of distinct forms and patterns of work experiences across the prototypical work lifespan Likewise older individuals are increasingly delaying retirement in favor of longer term labor force participation The study of age and work and work and retirement by industrial work and organizational IWO psychologists and scholars of human resources management and organizational behavior HR OB has recently proliferated in part as a result of such trends along with the recognition that age related processes are important indicators of various proximal e g job attitudes work behaviors work motives and wellbeing and distal outcomes e g sustainable employability climates for aging and firm performance at various levels of abstraction in modern work environments Recent theoretical advances have suggested that age along with individual psychological factors and various contextual influences can jointly influence work outcomes that contribute to long term employment success including work performance job attitudes work orientations and motivations Similar theoretical developments concerning retirement have postulated individual and contextual elements that drive success in the transition from career and work roles to non work and leisure as well as post retirement bridge employment roles In this Research Topic we aim to curate a collection of papers that are representative of current trends and advances in thinking about and investigating the role of age in workplace processes and the changing nature of retirement Our hope is to showcase various contemporary ideas and rigorous empirical studies as a means to inform broader thinking and to support enhanced theorizing and organizational practice regarding these processes Adjusting to an Older Work Force Lois Farrer Copperman,Frederick D. Extending Work Life Robert Clark, Melinda Sandler Morrill, 2017-02-28. Aging men and women are increasingly remaining in the labor force. Most often the reason for this is that they need to work additional years in order to be able to support an increasing number of years in retirement. This leaves employers scrambling for ways to adapt to a growing number of retirement-aged workers. Clark and Morrill provide a thorough assessment of the costs and benefits of accommodating later retirement ages and they describe options employers may use to create some new form of employment contract with aging workers. The most prominent issues employers with aging workers face are declining productivity, rising labor and benefits costs and a suboptimal age distribution of their workforces. According to the authors, employers could respond to these issues by finding new ways to accommodate older workers with, for instance, phased retirement and return to work policies. But the success of such policies also depends on tax policies and whether government-provided retirement benefits could be redesigned to play a role in a newly defined employment relationship.
