Their translations of Renaissance plays to modern cinema both highlight and comment on contemporary culture and attitudes to art, identity and the past. A dynamic analysis of twenty-seven films adapted from Shakespeare's works, Philippa Sheppard's Devouring Time addresses a wide range of topics including gender, ritual, music, setting, rhetoric and editing. She argues that the directors' choice to adapt these four hundred-year-old plays is an act of nostalgia, not only for the plays themselves but also for the period in which they were written, the association of genius that accompanies them and the medium of theatre. Sheppard contends that millennial anxiety brought on by the social and technological revolutions of the last five decades has generated a yearning for Shakespeare because he is an icon of a literary culture that is often deemed threatened. Authoritative and accessible, Devouring Time's investigations of filmmakers' nostalgia for the art of the past shed light on Western concepts of gender, identity and colonialism. In 30-Something and the Clock Is Ticking, she explores what having a child would mean to her identity, her career, her body, her relationships and her mental health. Kasey speaks to people who have children and people who don't, women who claim motherhood is the best thing they've ever done and those who say it's the worst. She discovers how the desire for a baby can drive people to the brink of insanity, the logistical challenges of ovulating and trying to conceive on a long-haul flight, the indignity and despair of IVF and the price of buying sperm on the Internet.
