The Peace Talk Nina Blakeman, 2024-02-16 They made a mistake Some might call it an error in judgement others call it murder As adults Andy Gary Hal and Monty are defined by the events of a single day on the banks of the Arkansas River that followed their high school graduation As each man struggles to establish himself in love in family in career in society a shadow of lies and secrecy looms The lives of four men are bound together by a shared past and a deadly assault Every year the men meet prior to a vigil that memorializes their former teacher not out of respect for him but to get their story straight However when the daughter of their slain teacher also turns up dead years of lies begin to unravel and each man must either face up to his role in a man's death or be overtaken by it Amid their struggle is Monty's father Judge Winston Reardon Upon learning that he's the namesake of a relative who committed treason during World War II his identity ruptures the collateral damage far reaching The judge's strategic punitive tactics stem from his determination that his son Monty not have a weak constitution like a traitor He's going to make a real soldier out of the boy As far as the judge is concerned there'll be no negotiation no conflict resolution no peace building To the judge life is a war and the thought of surrender not an option
