Rancière, Jean-Luc Nancy, Paolo Jedlowski, Werner Herzog, Angela Ricci Lucchi, Yervant Gianikian, Roberto Esposito, Georges Didi-Huberman, Jean-Louis Comolli, Julio Bressane, 2013-09-18 Eleven conversations taken from as many issues of Fata Morgana Eleven conversations which synthesize the project behind the journal which was born in spring 2006 At the time it was decided against having an editorial comment because of the conviction that if the journal was going to succeed it would speak for itself. However, the time has come to say a few words. A journal is first and foremost a collective gesture whose outline creates a field. The gesture made by Fata Morgana which at the beginning was only an intuition and then it slowly developed is the same one that makes cinema a place and an opportunity to think about contemporaneity. It is not simply about what happens around us; it is what emerges from within the events which gather around a concept from the concept of Bos issue No 0 to the concept of the Sacred issue No 10. In this perspective, cinema needs to be interpreted and understood as having its own un-specific specificity. It needs to be interpreted and understood in its principal form where it is capable of categorizing its un-specificity in other words its autonomous form where it can categorize its heteronomy. This means thinking about a concept starting from cinema and thinking about cinema starting from the concept. Thus, cinema becomes a special place and an opportunity to think about the universality of the concept as a marker of contemporaneity and the concept becomes the perspective from which to conceive cinema. By avoiding the double-edged sword of a sterile specificity or of a self-serving un-specificity, cinema becomes the quintessential way of thinking about modernity where autonomy of aesthetical form is affirmed in its heteronomy and its individuation imposes itself as a dis-individuation.

A Filmmaker's Journal Sumner Glimcher, 2012-04-01

Bernard Shaw on Cinema Bernard Shaw, 1997. With his customary wit and quite often with remarkable prescience, Bernard Shaw maintained a dialogue on cinema that ran almost from the infancy of the industry in 1908 until his death in 1950. Bernard F. Dukore presents the first collection of Bernard Shaw's writings and oral statements about cinema. Of the more than one hundred comments, Dukore has selected fifty-nine more than half are new to today's readers. Twelve are previously unpublished; one is published in full for the first time and forty-six appear in a collected edition of Shaw's writings for the first time since their publication in newspapers and magazines. Very early in the life of cinema, Shaw perceived that as an invention, movies would be more momentous than the printing press because they appealed to the illiterate as well as the literate, to the manual laborer at the end of an exhausting day as well as to the person with more leisure. He predicted that cinema would form people's minds and shape their conduct. He recognized that cinema's colossal proportions make mediocrity compulsory by leveling art and life down to the blandest morality and to the lowest common denominator of potential audiences throughout the world. By 1908, Shaw was familiar with experiments synchronizing movies and sound. When talkies arrived, he discerned that they would precipitate major changes in acting, writing, and economics. He also saw how they would affect live theatre. The theatre may survive as a place where people are taught to act, he said in 1930, but apart from that, there will be nothing but talkies soon. At that time, few people in the theatrical profession were making such prophecies, at least not in public.

Philosophical Perspective on Cinema Pedro Blas González, 2022-05-17. The main premise of Philosophical Perspective on Cinema is simple: Can a visual medium such as cinema put in greater perspective diverse aspects of human experience? Films are usually sorted by genres but by applying metaphysical existential categories to cinema the author enables readers to reflect on the nature and essence of existence by making life appear less transparent to itself Undoubtedly the connection between sensual reality and philosophical reflection is often glossed over when the emphasis is placed on theoretical abstractions and not life itself While this work is a reflection on the philosophy of existence the author embraces a practical approach to the metaphysical existential foundation of human existence
