

Plotinus, perhaps relying on the oral medium for his information, tells us in “On Intellect, Ideas and [Real] Being”: Plato regarded matter as lifeless and unconscious - without soul and intellect and that: “Perhaps, therefore, it is ridiculous to investigate whether intellect ranks in the order of beings; ...” - that if soul and intellect are not in matter, they must be outside of it.

Intellect- -One must be outside of such “order”.
It- -One does not originate in soul, nor soul in body nor body in matter, but these emanate out of (the) One, and, with increasing degree of removal, express less of the (light of) (the) One – are less beautiful.
