

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

Affirmative action refers to policies and practices that seek to uplift marginalized communities.

DEFINITION

John Scott defines affirmative action (also called "positive discrimination") as:

"Policies and practices that favor groups (mainly ethnic groups and women) who have historically experienced disadvantages (usually in the fields of employment and education)" (2014).

EXAMPLE

Targeted Promotions: Many corporations will look at their employee profiles and see that there is an overrepresentation of advantaged social groups within their managerial group. As a result, they may only open up internal promotions for people from disadvantaged social groups, such as women or racial minorities.
