The Graduate (1967) – Directed by Mike Nichols
Studio - MGM

The first shot is an intense close up of a man's face, making it obvious to the audience of his importance in the film. It then zooms out to display the location of an aeroplane giving indication to his situation and the fact he is travelling. The song that accompanies reflects the mood as it is about silence as there is no dialogue from the character within the opening. His direct eye line implies determination and thought and as if looking into the unknown. The next section signifies the emptiness of his future by his blocking and the blank space in front of him. The fact he is being carried forward implies he is being carried by time although it is inevitable he will get there. Then after he picks up his suitcase he becomes lost in the crowd, the shot then progresses to show the surrounding of couples lost in each other and then he breaks through with a sense of direction. We then end the scene again with an extreme close up at home in front of a fish tank with the same blank facial expression and the tank symbolises his containment and drowning feeling. The lack of movement symbolises his stagnant life. Leaving the question, will he embrace his future?
