The Algorithmic Beauty of Sea Shells Hans Meinhardt, 2013-04-17 As mentioned repetitively in the book the models describing shell patterning are only special applications of a mechanism developed to account for biological pattern formation in general To illustrate the close connection a new chapter originally written for the first German edition has been added that provides a survey of these general models Discussed is for instance how an embryo can obtain its primary axes how gene activation can proceed under the influence of such signals in a position dependent manner how complex netlike structures such as the vein of leaves can be generated and how legs and wings are initiated during development at precise positions Other sections of this chapter deal with phenomena at which the intimate connection to the mechanisms worked out for shell patterning are especially obvious The utilization of travelling waves in blood coagulation in the conduction of nerve pulses and in the chemotactic orientation of cells are examples Close parallels between a shell pattern and phyllotaxis suggest an alternative view of how the helical arrangement of leaves is achieved Using the shell patterns as a natural exercise book the computer program supplied with the first edition has been used in the meantime at several universities to teach students in basic properties of dynamic systems I have been frequently asked to make the programs for general pattern formation available The programs for the above mentioned models have been added to the accompanying diskette

Robots Paolo Arena, Luca Patanè, 2008-12-19 The basic principles guiding sensing perception and action in bio systems seem to rely on highly organised spatial temporal dynamics In fact all biological senses visual hearing tactile etc process signals coming from different parts distributed in space and also show a complex time evolution As an example mammalian retina performs a parallel representation of the visual world embodied into layers each of which represents a particular detail of the scene. These results clearly state that visual perception starts at the level of the retina and is not related uniquely to the higher brain centres. Although vision remains the most useful sense guiding usual actions, the other senses, first of all hearing but also touch, become essential particularly in cluttered conditions where visual percepts are somehow obscured by environment conditions. Efficient use of hearing can be learnt from acoustic perception in animals: insects like crickets that use this ancient sense more than all the others to perform a vital function like mating.
