This book examines different theoretical perspectives on the role that interaction plays in second language acquisition The principal perspectives are those afforded by the Interaction Hypothesis Socio Cultural Theory and the Levels of Processing model Interaction is therefore defined broadly it is seen as involving both intermental and intramental activity The theoretical perspectives are explored empirically in a series of studies which investigate the relationship between aspects of interaction and second language acquisition A number of these studies consider the effects of interaction on the acquisition of vocabulary word meanings by both adult and child L2 learners In addition the effects of language aptitude on input processing are considered Further studies consider the contribution that interaction makes to the acquisition of grammatical knowledge These studies provide clear evidence that social and intermental interaction are major forces in the acquisition of an L2 Finally the book considers a number of pedagogic specifications In particular the importance of discourse control as a means of learners obtaining the quality of interaction likely to foster acquisition is discussed Principles and Practice in Second Language

Krashen,1982 The present volume examines the relationship between second language practice and what is known about the process of second language acquisition summarising the current state of second language acquisition theory drawing general conclusions about its application to methods and materials and describing what characteristics effective materials should have The author concludes that a solution to language teaching lies not so much in expensive equipment exotic new methods or sophisticated language analysis but rather in the full utilisation of the most important resources native speakers of the language in real communication In Other Words Ellen Bialystok,Kenji
