Marine Corps Sourcing Competitions Historical Performance And Direction For Improvement:

Marine Corps Sourcing Competitions Historical Performance and Directions for Improvement, 1999 The United States Marine Corps USMC has long recognized the need to save money wherever possible Indeed the USMC prides itself on doing the most with the fewest resources But pressure is growing to do so even more The USMC needs to find funds to modernize itself With the deficit and growing entitlement programs continuing to exert budget pressures to reduce costs budget increases are unlikely Finding savings in the USMC s support infrastructure is one way to help fund USMC modernization while the USMC needs to strive continually for efficiency effectiveness is paramount Thus options for reducing costs must either sustain or improve the USMC s expeditionary capability In addition freeing up Marines from support activities for activities more directly related to their mission is another desirable outcome anticipated from USMC efficiency efforts Sourcing competition in which the cost and other performance metrics of internal USMC providers of services are compared with those of other DoD government or private sector providers can help achieve the efficiencies needed to obtain the above objectives and has been demonstrated as one promising way to reduce costs and improve performance The USMC already uses outside providers for many of its services e g support of Blount Island a USMC installation However the capabilities of outside providers have grown and there are now many more opportunities to leverage the capabilities of high performing non USMC providers

Marine Corps Sourcing Competitions Nancy Y. Moore, Rick Eden, Mark Wang, 1999 Marine Corps leaders recognize the need to improve support to expeditionary forces To help explore options for improving logistics the Marine Corps asked RAND to undertake a three part research effort 1 analyze the totality of logistics initiatives 2 measure order and ship and repair cycle times and 3 examine outsourcing options
