

Health, Economic and Social Impact of Covid-19 in Somalia

Dr. Ali Issa and Dr. Ayes Scek

Introduction

Somalia is one of the most vulnerable countries to coronavirus pandemic (COVID-19). The high level of vulnerability emanates from conflict induced state fragility, weak health systems, high level of poverty, and weak economic governance. COVID-19 recorded infection rates were low in Somalia compared to many countries in the region, possibly attributable to low testing capacity. Yet, there are heightened concerns relating to the actual impact in the country, on account of the limited capacity to address the health, economic and social emergency.

The above concerns are magnified by the classification of Somalia as among the countries most at risk from pandemic by the Global Risk Index¹. Such countries are found to have three times higher exposure to epidemics and six times higher risk in terms of lack of access to healthcare compared to the world's lowest risk countries. In a recent assessment, the WHO concluded that Somalia is among a list of 15 countries in the world that are at peril and require support in their preparedness to tackle the virus pandemic. Further, Johns Hopkins Health Security Index for 2019 ranked Somalia 194th out of 195 countries, scoring zero in emergency preparedness and response, infection control practices, and health care access.

The COVID-19 pandemic has already aggravated the vulnerabilities and challenges of internal conflicts, political instability, economic crisis, climate change disasters and gaps in services.

Health services are overstretched and at risk of complete collapse. Water and sanitation coverage are poor, and 2.6 million IDPs are at overcrowded camps around the country. The social protection system has limited coverage, and inadequate implementation systems. Million people are unable to meet their basic needs and lack access to essential services and employment.

This Policy brief is based on a rapid assessment, by the Somali National Economic Advisors of the NEC, of the COVID-19 impact on the health and socio-economic developments and prospects of the nation. The process of carrying out the assessment involved extensive interactions with ministries and other government agencies, whose valuable cooperation was indispensable. In view of limitations on the quality of data on the country's health, economic and social indicators, the efforts of the many institutions that availed data are highly appreciated and any remaining shortcomings on the quality of evidence provided should not be attributed to the NEC or other cooperating institutions.

Health Impact

Somalia has faced a severe threat from the COVID-19 pandemic on account of its fragile health institutions and limited human and financial resources. The country's weak healthcare system, which is far below that of most developing countries, has been shown by the
