

7. Testing for nonlinearity with surrogate data

- Is the apparent structure in the data most likely due to nonlinearity or rather due to linear correlations?
- Is the irregularity of the data most likely due to nonlinear determinism or rather due to random inputs to the system or fluctuations in the parameters?
- Only nonlinear deterministic signals are characterized by
 - finite dimensional attractor
 - finite, positive Lyapunov exponents
 - good linear-short term predictability
- The main idea for developing statistical significance test
 - Compute some nonlinear observable λ from the data
 - λ may be a dimension, a prediction error or whatever.
 - Does the value found for λ suggest that the data are indeed nonlinear?
 - What distribution of values for λ could we get from a comparable linear model?
 - Is the value we found perhaps consistent with a linear description?
 - If not, the data might be nonlinear
