

LAMP REIMAGED

The lamp image at the projection lens can be reimaged at the screen with an additional lens.

The image of the lamp that the Fresnel lens forms is not a sharp one. (The normal functioning of the projector does not require a sharp source image.)

A cardboard with a hole on the platen makes the source image sharper by stopping down the Fresnel lens. The smaller the hole, the sharper the image.

To reimage the source on the screen, a second Fresnel lens works well, since the diameter of a Fresnel lens may be large relative to its focal length.

Lamps without integral reflectors make nicer images.
