

faith and practice and their corresponding Islamic and Jewish beliefs and practices. He is certainly up to such a work, which would provide a context for scholars coming from outside the tradition to engage the material without getting lost in the maze of unexplained names, institutions, and places and without being put off by the repeated recourse to generalizations.

The History of Contemporary Iranian Jews, vol. 2, ed. Homa and Houman Sarshar, Beverly Hills, Calif.: Center for Iranian Jewish Oral History, 1997.

This is the second volume (the first also bore the name Teruā) issued by the Center for Iranian Jewish Oral History of Los Angeles. Like Pādyāvand, the series under the editorship of Amnon Netzer which aims at presenting multifaceted, scholarly, and chronologically broad aspects of Judeo-Iranian studies, The History of Iranian Jews as the organ of the Center seeks, primarily, to capture and preserve the voices and individual experiences of the generation whose memories reach back to the early part of this century.

The present volume, edited by the Sarshars, like Pādvāvand, is aimed first of all at an Iranian, primarily Jewish, audience, both at individuals still speaking Farsi and at their more-English-speaking offspring. Thus the majority of the articles are written in Persian (part 2) and their English versions are abbreviated. Noteworthy among these are Janet Afary's article on the role non-Muslims played in the Iranian Constitutional revolution, Homa Nateghs on the history of the Alliance Israélite in Iran, and Yafa Saghian Ghinghis's study of illuminated Persian ketubas (marriage contracts), mostly from the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. The articles in part 1 are in English and French. David Menashri's "Immigration of Iranian Jews to Israel" stands out for its serious scholarly approach. The khāṭirāt ("reminiscences") section of the volume (part 3), often accompanied by wonderful pictures, forms the heart of the volume. It recounts in moving words the memories of men and women whose occupations, ranging from traditional wrestler to a doctor of pharmacology, testify to the vibrancy and resilience of the Judeo-Iranian community in Iran and in the diaspora. Part 4 is a short compilation of vocabulary and phrases used by Iranian Jews, many of which are actually in Hebrew, and part 5 contains news from the Center.

It is a sign of the flourishing of the Judeo-Iranian community in the U.S. that it supports two journals devoted to retrieving and preserving the little-known Jewish past in Iran.
