

TIME #2 SURFERS

The background of the cover features a large, detailed illustration of a space capsule in orbit. Three children are visible inside the capsule's transparent dome. The boy in the foreground is smiling and waving, wearing a white shirt with a red circular logo. Behind him, another boy looks surprised with his mouth open. To the right, a girl with dark hair also has a surprised expression. The capsule is dark blue with various panels and windows. In the background, the Earth's surface is visible, showing a grid of latitude and longitude lines. A bright green, glowing ring or energy field surrounds the capsule, and a yellow light source is visible in the distance.

Inspired by the existential moral seriousness of writers like Cioran Kierkegaard and Nietzsche the author of this collection of short essays attempts to address the spiritual and moral vacuity he sees characterising his and his kind's material and consumer led modern day existence The problem of postmodernism and Anglo linguistic philosophy's omnipresent relativism is met with a cry of despair and often harkens back to a mode of meaning derived from something like a Heideggerian care or Schopenhauerian ontology of the Will An air of frustration is unmistakable and while the author does not talk down to the prospective reader a call to something like a mainstream philosophy of meaning is made to serve the man in the street while the Academy and its universities receive some criticism Tumors of the Eye and Ocular Adnexa Devron H. devoted to the study of a family of materials known as man ganites As for other exotic compounds the fast development of experiments has induced a rapid evolution of the main theoretical ideas A considerable effort both on theory and experiments has led to the currently much accepted notion that nanoscale phase separation is at the heart of the behavior of electrons in these compounds This point is described in detail in this book with a plethora of experimental data computer simulation results and analytic calculations supporting that description
