Contemporary British Ceramics and the Influence of Sculpture Laura Gray, 2018-01-02 This book investigates how British contemporary artists who work with clay have managed in the space of a single generation to take ceramics from niche interest craft to the pristine territories of the contemporary art gallery This development has been accompanied and perhaps propelled by the kind of critical discussion usually reserved for the higher discipline of sculpture Ceramics is now encountering and colliding with sculpture both formally and intellectually Laura Gray examines what this means for the old hierarchies between art and craft the identity of the potter and the character of a discipline tied to a specific material but wanting to participate in critical discussions that extend far beyond clay

Contemporary British Ceramics Ashley Thorpe, 2021-09-27 Ceramics is one of the most vibrant and engaging fields of contemporary British art

This lavishly illustrated book reviews the work of twenty two artists and celebrates their contribution to its rich landscape. Written from a collector's point of view it explores what contemporary ceramic objects can mean, what emotions they evoke and how artists draw upon different facets of the art and crafts worlds in their work. A vital visual and critical resource.

Contemporary British Ceramics showcases British ceramics as a compelling interdisciplinary practice attuned to the contemporary world. Featuring more than 280 images it encourages readers to look beneath the surface to discover the vibrant contribution that British ceramics makes to the broad field of contemporary art.

Sculpture and the Decorative in Britain and Europe Imogen Hart, Claire Jones, 2020-10-29 By foregrounding the overlaps between sculpture and the decorative this volume of essays offers a model for a more integrated form of art history writing. Through distinct case studies from a seventeenth century Danish altarpiece to contemporary British ceramics it brings to centre stage makers, objects, concepts and spaces that have been marginalized by the enforcement of boundaries within art and design discourse. These essays challenge the classed, raced and gendered categories that have structured the histories and languages of art and its making. Sculpture and the Decorative in Britain and Europe is essential reading for anyone interested in the history and practice of sculpture and the decorative arts and the methodologies of art history.

Ceramics and the Human Figure Edith Garcia, 2012-01-01 The human figure has been represented in clay throughout history and continues to evolve today. Artists are working with the figure in new ways, playing with materials and forms and making use of new technologies to produce challenging and unconventional work from the intact whole figure to the fragmented, hybrid and abstract. Ceramics and the Human Figure profiles an international range of ceramic artists all practicing within the fields of installation and sculpture. Divided by broad themes each chapter explores a variety of different expressive works. The book explores the role of figurative ceramics through history and in contemporary contexts. It also reveals the methods of six key artists using how-to images to illustrate their techniques. For artists, collectors and anyone interested in these themes Ceramics and the Human Figure is an exciting survey of the state of the figure in clay today.

A Re-conceptualisation of Contemporary Sculptural Ceramics Practice from a Post-minimalist Perspective Wendy Patricia Tuxill, 2011 This thesis examines the extent to which the 1960s process art strand of post-Minimalism can provide an analytical template for critical writing around contemporary ceramic art. A dearth of critical writing is an acknowledged problem in all types of ceramics practice and some of the reasons for this situation will be explored. In the past decade frequent calls have been made by artists, critics, academics and curators for a body of critical writing to underpin contemporary work and connect with wider cultural debates. During this period artists have begun to use the process of making the work to form part of the content. Such work has no relationship to traditional studio pottery and critics have described it as difficult to write about and classify in normative ceramic terms. However, this area of ceramic practice shares characteristics with post-Minimalism, a movement of the 1960s that emphasised the behaviour of materials and the act of making. In The Archaeology of Knowledge the French philosopher Michel Foucault suggests that a new critical language may emerge from the appropriation of other discourses providing new interpretations for subject areas not yet theoretically mapped out Foucault's notions on the formation of discourse are used as a methodological approach to investigate how process led sculptural ceramics may be articulated by an understanding of post Minimalist critical writings A substantial body of critical writing developed around post Minimalist process art providing a context for radical new approaches which broke with modernist traditions and which expanded and changed traditional definitions of sculpture Key post Minimalist texts are investigated as an analytical template for a new critical discourse for process led ceramic art A study of the sculptural ceramics of Richard Deacon and Kosho is undertaken as a means of identifying process led tendencies and the possibility of a re conceptualisation from a post minimalist perspective An analysis of the role of process within my own practice is used to provide visual evidence of contemporary ceramic work that can be re conceptualised from a post Minimalist perspective After twenty years of stagnant debate in the ceramics field this research might provide a new critical context for process led ceramic art The project shows a way that artists may be empowered to develop a critical literacy in a field that has traditionally lacked a research based approach It is hoped that it may well encourage other ceramics practitioners to explore new ways of presenting an academic critique of their own area of practice The contribution to knowledge identifies a new critical context and approach to writing for the process led area of ceramics practice that is currently described as being difficult to write about as having no appropriate critical language of its own and of being difficult to categorise in standard ceramic terms

500 Ceramic Sculptures Suzanne J. E.
