Consumer Choice in Historical Archaeology S.M. Spencer Wood, 1987-06-30 Historical archaeology has made great strides during the last two decades Early archaeological reports were dominated by descriptions of features and artifacts while research on artifacts was concentrated on studies of topology technology and chronology Site reports from the 1960s and 1970s commonly expressed faith in the potential artifacts had for aiding in the identifying socioeconomic status differences and for understanding the relationships between the social classes in terms of their material culture An emphasis was placed on the presence or absence of porcelain or teaware as an indication of social status These were typical features in site reports written just a few years ago During this same period advances were being made in the study of food bone as archaeologists moved away from bone counts to minimal animal counts and then on to the costs of various cuts of meat Within the last five years our ability to address questions of the relationship between material culture and socioeconomic status has greatly expanded The essays in this volume present efforts toward measuring expenditure and consumption patterns represented by commonly recovered artifacts and food bone These patterns of consumption are examined in conjunction with evidence from documentary sources that provide information on occupations wealth levels and ethnic affiliations of those that did the consuming One of the refreshing aspects of these papers is that the authors are not afraid of documents and their use of them is not limited to a role of confirmation

The Carriage Trade Thomas A. Kinney, 2004-10-13 Co Winner of the 2005 Hagley Business History Book Prize given by the Business History Conference In 1926 the Carriage Builders National Association met for the last time signaling the automobile's final triumph over the horse drawn carriage Only a decade earlier carriages and wagons were still a common sight on every Main Street in America In the previous century carriage building had been one of the largest and most dynamic industries in the country In this sweeping study of a forgotten trade Thomas A Kinney extends our understanding of nineteenth century American industrialization far beyond the steel mill and railroad The legendary Studebaker Brothers Manufacturing Company in 1880 produced a hundred wagons a day one every six minutes Across the country smaller factories fashioned vast quantities of buggies farm wagons and luxury carriages Today if we think of carriage and wagon at all we assume it merely foreshadowed the automobile industry Yet the carriage industry epitomized a batch work approach to production that flourished for decades Contradicting the model of industrial development in which hand tools small firms and individual craftsmanship simply gave way to mechanized factories the carriage industry successfully employed small scale business and manufacturing practices throughout its history The Carriage Trade traces the rise and fall of this heterogeneous industry from the pre industrial shop system to the coming of the automobile using as case studies Studebaker the New York based luxury carriage maker Brewsters and dozens of smaller firms from around the country Kinney also explores the experiences of the carriage and wagon worker over the life of the industry Deeply researched and strikingly original this study contributes a vivid chapter to the story of America's industrial revolution
