

A Perfect Dose of Pessimism

IS THE GLASS HALF FULL? OR EMPTY?

The Different Types of Optimists and Pessimists

GLASS HALF FULL

Dispositional or trait optimism

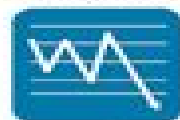

People who have a tendency to expect a future that is more positive than negative.

Example: My future is bright. Good things will happen to me.

Explanatory optimism

A style of explaining negative events by referring to specific external causes that will likely change over time.

Example: You lose money in the stock market and think, that stinks, but the market is crazy right now. Bet I'll do better when it settles down.

Strategic optimism

These people distract themselves and don't dwell on a potentially stressful event coming up. If things go bad, it wasn't their fault, it could have been worse, and they're better off than most people.

Example: That upcoming public speech—you're not worried about it. You don't give it much thought until it comes up, and you feel prepared.

Optimistic bias

The tendency to think you're better at something than other people. Bad things are more likely to happen to other people and good things are more likely to happen to you.

Example: Am I better than the average driver? Hell yeah!

GLASS HALF EMPTY

Dispositional or trait pessimism

People who have a chronic tendency to expect a future that is more negative than positive.

Example: My future is dim. It's just as likely that something bad will happen to me as something good.

Explanatory pessimism

A style of explaining why bad things happen that faults yourself or reasons that aren't going to change. This can be a risk factor for depression.

Example: You lose money in the stock market. Instead of chalking it up to the volatile market you blame yourself for being stupid to put so much money in the market.

Defensive pessimism

A strategy to manage anxiety by lowering expectations and anticipating what could go wrong in a potentially stressful situation.

Example: You're anxious about giving a public speech so you think through possible pitfalls (the slide show breaking down, spilling water on your blouse) and work ahead to avert them.

Pessimistic bias

The tendency to think you're worse at something than other people. You expect more bad things, and fewer good things, compared with the average person.

Example: I always defer to other drivers. I'm horrible on the road.
