

- 8 There were a lot of variables that the girls could not control, however hard they tried. For example: the bubbles of oxygen might not come out of every part of each leaf evenly, so some of the leaf discs would tip over and rise to the surface more quickly or more slowly; some of the discs might hit the sides of the beaker, which would make them rise more slowly; it would be difficult to decide exactly when to start the timer, and when to stop it.
- 9 The conclusion should be a response to the hypothesis that the learner stated in the answer to question 4. For example: Leaf discs photosynthesise more quickly in bright light than in dim light.
- 10 Leaves use light as their energy source for photosynthesis, so they photosynthesise more quickly in bright light than in dim light. This means that they make oxygen more quickly. Oxygen bubbles collect more quickly on the undersides of the leaf discs in bright light, so the discs rise to the surface more quickly.

Topic 1.3 The carbon cycle

Exercise 1.3 Completing a carbon cycle diagram

- 2 So that the gases in the tube could not mix with the air. This allowed Aran to see how the processes happening inside the tubes changed the concentration of carbon dioxide in the tube.
- 3 Any two from: temperature, volume of indicator, time the apparatus was left for.

Tube	Contents	Colour of indicator at start	Colour of indicator after two hours
A	plant and animal	red	red
B	animal only	red	yellow
C	plant only	red	purple
D	nothing	red	red

- 5 In tube A, the plant photosynthesised and respired, but it photosynthesised more than it respired. The animal respired. Overall, about the same quantity of carbon dioxide was taken in for photosynthesis as was given out by respiration. The quantity of carbon dioxide in the tube did not change.
- In tube B, the animal respired, giving out carbon dioxide. There was a high concentration of carbon dioxide in the tube.
- In tube C, the plant photosynthesised and respired, but it photosynthesised more than it respired. More carbon dioxide was taken in than was given out. So there was almost no carbon dioxide left in the tube.
- In tube D, there was no respiration or photosynthesis. The quantity of carbon dioxide in the tube did not change.
- 6 Look for these ideas:
- The only process that removes carbon dioxide from the atmosphere is photosynthesis.
  - Respiration and combustion add carbon dioxide to the atmosphere.
  - If there was no photosynthesis, then carbon dioxide would build up in the atmosphere.

Topic 1.4 Climate change

Exercise 1.4 Interpreting graphs about climate change

- 1 There is more carbon dioxide in the atmosphere now than there used to be: Graph C.
Sea level is steadily rising: Graph A.
Sea ice in the Arctic is present for fewer months in the year now, and there is less of it: Graph B.
- 2 Sea level is rising. Sea level has risen by 230 mm since 1880.
- 3 Sea ice covered a smaller area in 2017–2018 than between 1979 and 2016.
Sea ice appeared later and disappeared earlier in 2017–2018.
