

Guide to Greek and Roman architectural orders.

---

Doric order

Developed in the Dorian regions of Ancient Greece during the transition to the construction of temples and structures made of stone. The Doric column has no base; the trunk is cut by vertical grooves - flutes; the capital consists of a round cushion - echinus and a thick square slab - abacus.

Ionic order

Developed in the Ionian regions of Ancient Greece between 560 and 500 BC. It has a slender column with a base and a shaft cut by vertical grooves - flutes; the capital consists of two large curls - volutes. The Ionic order differs from the Doric order in greater ease of proportions and richer decoration of all parts.

Corinthian order

Formed in the second half of the 5th century, became widespread in the architecture of the Hellenistic era and Ancient Rome. It has a high column with a base, a fluted shaft, and a lush capital, consisting of an elegant carved pattern of acanthus leaves, framed by small volutes.

Tuscan order

The simplest of the five orders. It resembles the Doric order but has a simpler base and an unadorned frieze.

Composite order

An order of Classical architecture, developed in Rome, that combines characteristics of both the Ionic order and the Corinthian order.
