

Disclosure of Contingent Liabilities

Occurrence of event	Result in Loss/Liabilities
Virtually certain	It is certain	It is not a contingent liability and recognised as liability in financial statements
Probable	Probability of occurrence of loss is more than non-occurrence	It is reported as accrued liability in financial statements.
Possible	Probability of occurrence of loss is not more than non-occurrence	It is disclosed by way of note to reported financial statements
Remote	Possibility of occurrence of an outcome is very remote	Possibility is so remote that its disclosure would be misleading, hence ignored.

Example of Contingent Liabilities

b20

Royal Steel Ltd. produced steel cupboards in December '08 in certain number of batches. Out of these, few batch production is delivered in January '09. A defect was found in Feb.'09 for material used and these were insignificant returns so far and same is also expected for future. The accounting year ends on March 31, 2009. State implications on financial statements reported for the year ended on 31.3.2009.

Here, it seems to be a remote contingent liability and hence no disclosure in financial reports is required.

Personal manager of Balam Furniture Ltd. informed management about a dangerous area in the second floor of a factory in October 2008. The management also agreed to look after it. But no repair/renovation was made. One worker slipped and fell 20 feet breaking an arm and leg on Jan. 10, 2009. On February 7, 2009 the worker filed a suit against company for Rs. 3,00,000. The lawyer for company advised that company was negligent and the worker was also negligent as he knew that floor was not safe; hence, claim to the extent of Rs. 2,00,000 could not be avoided. The accounting year of the company ends on March 31, 2009. State implications on financial statements to be reported for the year ended on 31.3.2009.
