

Importance of Biodiversity

□ 3.1.1 Biodiversity is the total diversity of living systems and it exists at several levels.

- Biodiversity refers to the variety of life on Earth at all levels, from genes to ecosystems
- Three major levels of biodiversity:
  - Habitat diversity: Variety of physical environments (forests, wetlands, deserts, coral reefs)
    - Diverse habitats provide different niches and microclimates
    - Regions with many distinct habitats support greater biodiversity
  - Species diversity: Number of species and abundance of each species in a location
    - Richness: Number of different species in an area
    - Evenness: Relative abundance of each species
    - High species diversity allows ecosystems to function effectively through various ecological roles
  - Genetic diversity: Variation of genes within individuals and populations
    - Allows species to adapt to changing environmental conditions
    - Increases chances of survival over time
    - Examples: Cheetahs (low diversity, vulnerable to disease), bananas (genetically identical crops, susceptible to pests), coral reefs (high diversity, more resilient)

□ 3.1.2 The components of diversity contribute to the resilience of ecological systems.

- Resilience refers to an ecosystem's ability to resist change and return to equilibrium despite disturbances
- Ecosystem complexity and resilience
  - More connections allow species to shift between food sources when disruptions occur
  - Negative feedback loops help restore balance after disturbance
  - Greater genetic diversity enhances adaptation to environmental changes
- Stage of succession influences resilience:
  - Pioneer communities (early succession): Simple, low biodiversity, less resilient
  - Climax communities (mature): Complex, high biodiversity, more resilient
- Limiting factors and ecosystem health:
  - High productivity promotes high biodiversity and complex food webs
