Endangered Species

The extinct great auk

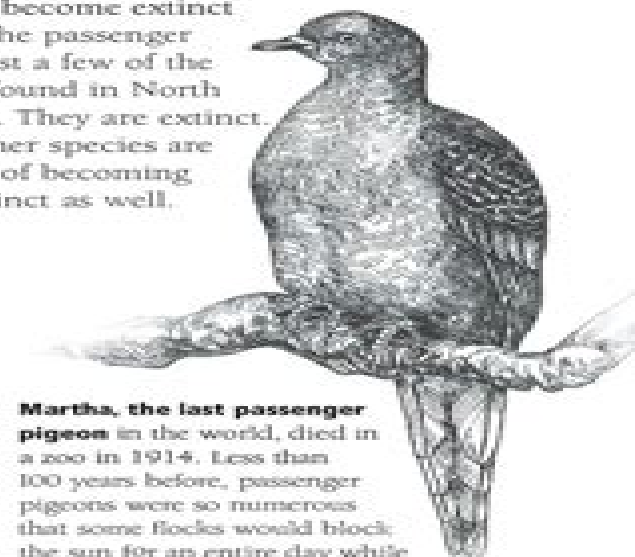

The estimated rate of extinction ranges widely because we don't know how many species there are on Earth. Suppose that one species becomes extinct every hour. How many species would become extinct in one month? In one year? Since you were born?

The eastern cougar is now endangered in Ontario.

Dinosaurs as large as a 6-story building and as small as chickens roamed the Earth for millions of years — much longer than humans. Nobody really knows why dinosaurs became extinct. A species that is extinct no longer lives anywhere on Earth. In North America alone, at least 500 species of plants and animals have become extinct since the 1500s. The great auk, the passenger pigeon and the sea mink are just a few of the creatures that are no longer found in North America, or anywhere else. They are extinct.

Many other species are at risk of becoming extinct as well.

Martha, the last passenger pigeon in the world, died in a zoo in 1914. Less than 100 years before, passenger pigeons were so numerous that some flocks would block the sun for an entire day while they flew over. Why are there no passenger pigeons left? They were hunted into extinction.
