H. Tawney Frederick Jack Fisher, 1961 The Manorial Economy in Early-modern East-Central Europe Jerzy Topolski, 1994 Inflation in Tudor and Early Stuart England R. B. Outhwaite, 1969 In this book Dr Outhwaite traces the emergence and development of the differing opinions both contemporary and modern about the causes of the price rise in Tudor and Early Stuart England and reviews critically the principal modern interpretations It is a concise survey of what men past and present have written on price inflation The author begins with contemporary analyses revealing the close relationships in both chronology and form between the actual experience of inflation and what men had to say about it He establishes the existence of explanations of two basic types real or physical explanations and monetary ones and shows how and why emphasis has tended to shuffle between the two over the past 400 years The merits and demerits of the two basic explanations are carefully discussed in language free of technical obscurities and Dr Outhwaite points the way towards a reconciliation between the two Attention is drawn throughout to the writings of historians and economists who have contributed most to our understanding of this important formative experience in English history Footnote references discuss critically the major published writing on the subject at each stage of the analysis This is both a guide to the subject and to the literature foreign as well as British Tudor Economic Documents, Being Select Documents Illustrating the Economic and Social History of Tudor England Richard Henry Tawney, Eileen Edna Power, 1953 Life on the English Manor H.
