Forget Adam Weinberger Vincent

Engel,2024-11-26 First there is Adam Weinberger s long childhood in a world that has no idea yet what is in store for it The childhood of a lover of illusions who dreams of changing the world and of freeing his family from the burden of a tradition that he finds unbearable The adolescence of a young boy who is unable to express his love for Esther his admiration for his uncle his tenderness toward his mother The helplessness of a young man who sees that dreams and fiction are unable to halt the destruction of this world and its inhabitants Later there are fragments of narrations the broken mirror that through more or less well meaning intermediaries reflects the flight of this child who has become a man who no longer believes in dreams who no longer believes in words who has taken refuge in gestures those of his profession medicine and those of his great passion the construction of ships in bottles And who flees words and other people to the point of losing his identity Between the two is there of which one dares not speak And then in the end after forgetting at the end of all the flights there is the return of childhood from beyond death the single truth of a work of fiction of the narration of a life      Life'S Passions Lori

Maurizi,2011-06-30 In Lifes Passions Lori Maurizi presents a poetry collection consisting of her lifes work to date Her poetry stemming from her own experiences and springing from her heart and her empathy traces a journey through lifes many ups and downs Her work addresses many of todays issues ranging from love heartbreak and abuse to addiction and the eventual search for tranquility This is an emotional journey through lifes passions From the innocence of childhood to the pain of unexpected tragedy the emotions of a life are exposed and explored in this heartfelt poetry collection Today I Heard a Story Today I heard a story a story of the bittersweet a heart in need of mending it began with a sad truth a tale of neglect how the opening chapter broke my heart I could have wept instead with that solemn feeling I chose to rewrite the next chapter verse by verse to enchant you with a new story to tell about what you are truly worth the nurturing that should have been hugs and kisses all that is sweet today I changed a story a story of woe to a story everyone should expect      Fragments in Prose
