warmth to the steam heated living room in the modest apartment of Mr Thomas S Bingle lower New York somewhere to the west of Fifth Avenue and not far removed from Washington Square in the wrong direction however if one must be precise in the matter of emphasizing the social independence of the Bingle family and be it here recorded that without the genial aid of that grate of coals the living room would have been a cheerless place indeed Mr Bingle had spent most of the evening in trying to coax heat from the lower regions into the pipes of the seventh heaven wherein he dwelt and without the slightest sign of success The frigid coils in the corner of the room remained obdurate If they indicated the slightest symptom of warmth during the evening it was due entirely to the expansive generosity of the humble grate and not because they were moved by inward remorse They were able however to supply the odour of far off steam as of an abandoned laundry and sometimes they chortled meanly revealing signs of an energy that in anything but a steam pipe might have been mistaken for a promise to do better
