comfort zone We have all witnessed the troubled misfits who find themselves in my stories and poems By frequently using first person narration I find myself better engaged to understand each characters proclivities Simons Bath introduces us to Simon the man boy who sees things differently than most of us and turns childish fantasy into reality at least for him The tortured Harold Wharton in A Dying Breed was developed from my own complex relationship with my British father Natures Way features a character that goes to hell with himself in a way that is nefariously memorable and generously twisted A Novel Affair is a dark fantasy love story about a writer getting into places that are usually best left alone but Myles Blainey goes much too far into his writing world with alarming consequences The poems wrap themselves around each story as darkness humour fantasy and big surprises work to achieve my fundamental responsibility to the reader Entertain Cheers Dave
