Opium and the Romantic Imagination Alethea Hayter, 2015-07-30 Does the habit of taking drugs make authors write better or worse or differently Does it alter the quality of their consciousness shape their imagery influence their technique For the Romantic writers of the nineteenth century many of whom experimented with opium and some of whom were addicted to it this was an important question but it has never been fully answered In this study Alethea Hayter examines the work of five writers Crabbe Coleridge De Quincey Wilkie Collins and Francis Thompson who were opium addicts for many years and of several other writers notably Keats Edgar Allan Poe and Baudelaire but also Walter Scott Dickens Mrs Browning James Thomson and others who are known to have taken opium at times The work of these writers is discussed in the context of nineteenth century opinion about the uses and dangers of opium and of Romantic ideas on the creative imagination on dreams and hypnagogic visions and on imagery so that the idiosyncrasies of opium influenced writing can be isolated from their general literary background The examination reveals a strange and miserable region of the mind in which some of the greatest poetic imaginations of the nineteenth century were imprisoned Great Names Walter James Turner, 1926

Islam and the English Enlightenment, 1670-1840 Humberto Garcia, 2012-01-30 A corrective addendum to Edward Said's Orientalism this book examines how sympathetic representations of Islam contributed significantly to Protestant Britain's national and imperial identity in the eighteenth century Taking a historical view Humberto Garcia combines a rereading of eighteenth century and Romantic era British literature with original research on Anglo Islamic relations He finds that far from being considered foreign by the era's thinkers Islamic republicanism played a defining role in Radical Enlightenment debates most significantly during the Glorious Revolution French Revolution and other moments of acute constitutional crisis as well as in national and political debates about England and its overseas empire Garcia shows that writers such as Edmund Burke Lady Mary Wortley Montagu Samuel Taylor Coleridge Robert Southey and Percy and Mary Shelley not only were influenced by international events in the Muslim world but also saw in that world and its history a viable path to interrogate contest and redefine British concepts of liberty This deft exploration of the forgotten moment in early modern history when intercultural exchange between the Muslim world and Christian West was common resituates English literary and intellectual history in the wider context of the global eighteenth century The direct challenge it poses to the idea of an exclusionary Judeo Christian Enlightenment serves as an important revision to post 9/11 narratives about a
