Passing Through Eden:

Passing Through Eden Tod Papageorge, 2007 When Tod Papageorge began this work the newspapers saw Central Park chiefly as a site of danger and outrage and they were doubtless partly right But the park shown here seems no more dangerous than life itself and no less filled with beauty charming incident excess jokes in questionable taste unintended consequence and pathos truly described One might say that no artist has done so much for this piece of land since Frederick Law Olmstead John Szarkowski The Museum of Modern Art New York After receiving a Guggenheim Fellowship in 1977 Tod Papageorge began to photograph intensively in Central Park employing medium format cameras rather than the 35mm Leicas that he had used since moving to New York in 1965 These pictures gathered in Passing Through Eden convey the passion that as Rosalind Krauss once described it in Papageorge's work embraces the sensuous richness of physical reality that fullness which Baudelaire called intimacy when he meant eroticism From picture to picture Papageorge constructs a world that resembles our own but that also invokes that of the Bible Passing Through Eden is sequenced to parallel in its opening pages the first chapters of Genesis from the Creation through the metaphorical generations that follow on from Cain before giving over to a virtuosic run of pictures that as he expresses it in his illuminating afterword to the book picks up the threads that tie the Bible to Chaucer Shakespeare and Page Six of the New York Post This ambitious body of work incorporating pictures produced over the course of 25 years displays not only Papageorge's remarkable ability to make photographs that read like condensed narratives but also his skill at weaving them into sequences that echo profound cultural narratives It challenges the reader to succumb or not to the pleasures of the fullness of each individual photograph while ignoring or not the tug of a tale demanding to be told Like Eden itself this book sets our desire for beauty against that of knowledge even as it reminds us of some of the ways that we read and come to know books Tod Papageorge:

Passing Through Eden, 2022-11-22 A New York idyll Papageorge's portrait of Central Park as modern Arcadia back in print Tod Papageorge born 1940 started photographing intensely in New York's Central Park in the late 1970s and continued working there until he moved from the city in the early 1990s More than ten years later he edited these pictures into a book which in its marriage of the sensual and poetic evokes the prelapsarian Eden suggested by its title This reissue of Passing Through Eden duplicates the first 2007 edition in its entirety including Papageorge's thoughtful essay on the evolution of his photography and its basis in his early attempts to write poetry His essay further describes how the first half of the book follows the opening chapters of the Book of Genesis from the Creation through the metaphorical generations that follow Cain suggesting how even in the heart of a modern city we might find echoes of elemental Biblical tales being acted out around us by those drawn into the park and its promise of beauty and peace This section of Passing Through Eden then leads to a run of pictures confirming that the human comedy is equally alive and well in the park even as its landscape delightful and wild retakes center stage to end the book Hats Off to the Sun George Whipple, 1996 Hats Off to the Sun celebrates the
